Thanks All....

17:42:00 From Dick Meuler To Everyone:
For style and ease of shaping inside of bowls, shape
the bowl to match a Catenary Curve.

17:42:05 From Leonard Davis To Everyone:
Question, I noticed you left it crowned in the middle.
I see people leave it and others take it out. Why do you leave it in?

17:42:25 From Matt Harber To Everyone:
It looks cool... very unnatural natural edge.

17:43:08 From Matt Harber To Everyone:
Oh, you mean the center.... It makes everything stronger, so you can get thinner. Realistically, you don't have to turn out the middle until the last.

17:43:13 From Joaquin Juatai To Everyone:
I leave the center because it helps support the rim. Keeps the sides more stable

17:43:16 From Robert Hodge To Everyone:
That's a handsome beaver sticker you've got on that cabinet back there....

17:43:18 From Dane Chandler -Tucson AZ To Everyone:
you work down the walls incrementally leaving the center
mass and removing it as you go down. this prevents the walls from flexing.

17:43:48 From Leonard Davis To Everyone:
Thnak oyu all

17:45:11 From Ward Wilson To Everyone:
Howdy Robert and Harry

17:45:20 From Robert Hodge To Everyone:
Hello Ward.

17:49:27 From Dane Chandler -Tucson AZ To Everyone:

17:49:47 From Tim Hatch Bastrop, TX To Everyone:
Great Tip...Thanks Dane

17:49:51 From brenda To Everyone:
good idea

17:51:07 From Dane Chandler -Tucson AZ To Everyone:
when doing a NE w/bark, soak the rim area w/ CA prior to turning.

when using allen keys, you can increase the hardness
to increase the dexterity off the toolrest; for the ones.
I make I do take half the length off the short leg to decrease >80 the catchyness as the cutting edge is not inline with the center of the shaft
