Could also use a sewing pin with a purl head at the wire intersections

16:36:50 From Matt Harber:
How would that work, Heather?

16:37:23 From Matt Harber:
I thought of using brass nails...

16:37:33 From howardpatterson:
DEMO ?

16:37:40 From Heather Budarick:
Just push the pin into the wood at the cross

16:38:15 From Matt Harber:
Reacted to "Just push the pin in..." with

16:39:03 From Heather Budarick:
You could probably even cut the pin down to 1/4 - 1/2" long. But they come in all colours including purl

Always wear a belt so you have a tourniquet on your person.

17:16:57 From Gerald Jensen:
Whenever I go to the shop, my cellphone is in a leather holster on my hip ... no ifs, ands, or buts!

17:17:06 From Bob Moffett:
KnoxBox is good safety measure. Emergency services has a key to get in and they have to log in to the company to get the key so it leaves a trail.

17:17:28 From Doug in NH:
A Know box is used by fire & ambulance services. A key to your door is secured inside and the FD or EMS cab open it with their key. They can then access you home with out having to damage the door

17:17:36 From no band aids brenda:
if I hear your background noise..i will mute you

Reacted to "if I hear your backg..." with

17:18:33 From Steve Lackscheide:
Saw a demo some years back (wish I could remember who did it!) that suggested that any first aid box should be openable with 1 hand, just in case one hand/arm is incapacitated.

17:19:39 From Safety Sue Largo:
Thanks Tom Kenny

17:20:14 From Doug in NH:
Should read KNOX box.

17:46:07 From Heather Budarick:

17:47:39 From Heather Budarick:
