16:01:44 From Ron Vincent Wyo., MI: Reacted to "Thank you Dane" with

16:07:09 From Bob Grinstead - Mansfield, Texas: I'm glad Scott and Dane got the tee shirts idea started. I don't wear tee shirts much and bought a polo shirt from Walmart $16.92 + tax<https://www.walmart.com/ip/Ben-Hogan-Men-s-Big-Men-s-Performance-Easy-Care-Solid-Short-Sleeve-Polo-Shirt-up-to-5XL/758565149?athbdg=L1102&from=/search>I was going to send it to Scott. but I'm cheap and by the time I paid for shipping both ways the cost just kept adding up. So I decided to try to embroidery the logo on the shirt myself on my daughter-in-law's sewing / embroidery machine. I'd like the experience I found an online digitizing company Imaker Digitizing Co. <https://www.imakerdigitizing.com/> that would convert our logo into a embroidery type file for $12, very inexpensive and fast service. I had them convert it for me.

16:07:31 From Bob Grinstead - Mansfield, Texas: Still worrying about doing this myself I found a local shop that will embroidery a shirt, left chest for $12. By the time I bought the thread and stuff to do it with it would be more than the $12 and I'm still just playing around and hoping I can get it right...I went with the local embroidery shop. I should get it back in about 10 days. I'll share the files with anyone that wants them. Just let me know. I'll also sent them to Dave, for our webpage. The file types are pes, dst, emb and a pdf with specifications. The embroidery company I used, if you want to contact them is <https://customstitchez.com/> They sell shirts and hats too. They can use the same file I gave them and resize to fit the item.

16:10:12 From Bob Grinstead - Mansfield, Texas: I think the files are now on the webpage

I just looked up the answer, and it's a big fat NO!!! CA glue should never be used with anything that will come into contact with food after it's cured, including cutting boards, platters, bowls, cups, etc.. This information is on a lot of websites, including the Parfix site.

Parifix uses water instead of Acetone as a carrier which helps prevent the blooming and fumes. Medical grade CA contains Butyl -2-Cyanoacrylate, which Parifix doesn't offer after I checked their manufacturers website, remains flexible and will dissolve over time. According to Parson Adhesives, the maker of Parifix, there glues are made for industrial use.

From the FDA... According to the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), cyanoacrylate, the main component of CA glue, can cause allergic reactions, hemorrhages, and other health problems. When food comes in contact with the glue, it becomes contaminated, making it dangerous to ingest.¹ Although some people use CA glue as a food-safe finish, it is not FDA-approved for direct or indirect contact with food. ²It is important to note that once CA glue cures, it becomes an inert material similar to epoxy ². However, it is still not recommended to use CA glue on food containers or utensils.
