@Chris Neilan- Waterford, Connecticut I guess if you're not placing the loved one in a grave or niche, then I don't think the material matters. We live near the coast so maybe ground water is a factor?

I encountered a cemetery with specific requirements for a wooden urn, the two I have done were no problem for the funeral home, though.

Related to Randy's comments on the safety switch, you can get them in a 220 version, but you will have to do a bit of your own wiring. Search for Safety Paddle Switch. Make sure that whatever switch you use for 220 cuts BOTH lines, not just one. This one on Amazon cuts both lines, and mounts in a standard single gang electrical box. <https://www.amazon.com/POWERTEC-71007-220V-Paddle-Switch/dp/B00KPEEPAW/>

Mainly because they have a warehouse locally so no shipping. They have nearly everything every [nearby] city will have a metal supply shop where HSS can be purchased locally on the cheap with out giving up quality. Most of the time it will be offcuts that typical fabrication shops have no use for. so you will get a deal on some quality steel
