When I was a teen; My dad and I went to the local bowling alley to play pool. Two tables. The guys on the other table watched us, then suggested we play doubles. After a few games, they said how about penny a point? "Sure, OK". We kept playing. After another game, they said, How about quarter a point? Both of us said sure. After the break, the one guy noticed we had started playing right handed, looked at us and asked, "Weren't you playing left handed?" My dad and I looked at each other and said, "Yep".

45-degree angles are a good starting point on gouges. From there you should adjust the bevel to the angles you prefer. Bevel angles are what works best for you. There are no magic bevel angles.
